I thought it was a pity to let it be quite torn off, so I tried to put it back over the wall, and she came stealthily forward and gave me a blow with an umbrella which had a handle—a remarkably solid blue one just like yours. It is detestable to think of that creature having an umbrella like yours?"

I thought it was a pity to let it beneat hand, let it fall again and burst into tears. "It was such again and burst into tears." It was such again and burst into tears. "It was such the said faintly. "It was quite right to do," she said faintly. "It was quite right to do, it," he inter-trupted. "Now that I have been round the garden with your father, and have gone the lileas."

"I am quite sure I should not. How could I or you, or any one, like a woman who plants herself behind a wall and him dangerous weapon like that? It is charitable of you to think of giving her the cenefit of the doubt, but I know, if ever you saw her, you would think of her as I do. It is a woman's first duty to be feminine; no lady could have done what she did." What would a lady have done then-

I can't help thirking that she would have felt a great deal of pity for the poor little children who came into her bright neighborhood from their own dark dismal homes, with never a bit of green, much less a flower, to gladden their eyes, and when they saw the lavish plenty of both on her trees could not replenty of both on her trees could not restrain their hands. She ought to have understood what they must feel, and have given the poor children a share of her own abundance, instead of trying to hurt them. Such blows as hers"— the pure, sweet air, chirping forth, as it were, the greatness and prosperity of the excellent family vegetate under the shade of a mighty buttonwood tree, which by little and little grew so great which by little and little grew so great as entirely to overshadow their palace. The city gradually spread its suburbs round their domain. Houses sprung up to interrupt their prospects. The rural lanes in the vicinity began to grow into the bustle and populousness of streets; in short, with all the habits of rustic life they began to find themselves the inhabitants of a city. Still, however, they maintained their hereditary character and hereditary possessions, with acter and hereditary possessions, with all the tenacity of petty German princes in the midst of the empire. Welfert in the midst of the empire. Welfert was the last of the line, and succeeded to the patriarchal bench at the door, under the family tree, and swayed the scepter of his fathers, a kind of rural po-tentate in the midst of a metropolis. To share the cares and sweets of sovereignty, he had taken unto himself a help mate, one of that excellent kind called stirring women: that is to say, housewives who are always busy when there is nothing to do. Her activity, however, took one particular direction; her whole life seemed devoted to intense knitting; whether at home or abroad, walking or sitting, her needles were continually in motion, and it is even affirmed that by her unwearied industry she very nearly supplied her household with stockings throughout the year. This worthy couple were blessed with however, took one particular direction; her whole life seemed devoted to intense pains had been taken with her education, so that she could stitch in every variety of way, make all kinds of pickles and preserves, and mark her own name on a sampler. rences, seeming to ogle most affectionately the passers by.

Thus reigned and vegetated Wolfert Webber over his paternal acres, peaceably and contentedly. Not but that, like all other sovereigns, he had his occasional cares and vexations. The growth of his native city sometimes caused him annoyance. His little territory gradually sional cares and vexations. The growth of his native city sometimes caused him annoyance. His little territory gradually became hemmed in by streets and houses, which intercepted air and sunshine. He was now and then subject to the truptions of the border population, that infest the streets of a metropolia, who would sometimes make midnight forays into his dominions, and carry off paptive whole platoons of his noblest subjects. Vagrant swine would make a descent, too, now and then, when the gate was left open, and it was a before them; and missed his cultural makes a descent, too, now and then, when the gate was left open, and it was before them; and missed his cultural makes a descent, too, now and then retine would often decapitate the illustrious sunflowers, the glory of filial piety and obedience. The chief cause of anxiety to honest Wolfert, however, was the growing proporty of the city. The expenses of living doubled and trebled; but he could not doubled and trebled; but he could not double and trebled; but he could not doubled and trebled the magnitude of his babbages, and the number of competitors prevented the increase of price; thus, therefore, while every one around him the city. The ninepin alley was deserted, for the premature chilliness of the day had driven the company within doors. As it was Saturday afternoon, the impitual club was in session, composed principally of regular Dutch burgers, though mingled occasionally with persons of various character and country, as is natural in a place of such motley population.

This youngster gradually became an intimate visitor of the family. He talked but little, but he sat long. He filled the father's pipe when it was empty, gathered up the mother's knitting needle or ball of worsted when it fell to the ground, stroked the sleek coat of the tortoise shell cat, and replenished the tea pot for the daughter from the bright copper kettle that sung before the fire. All these quiet little offices may seem of trifling import, but when true love is translated into Low Dutch it is in several guttural sounds from Ramm Ra-pelye, betokening that he was laboring with the unusual production of an idea translated into Low Dutch it is in this way that it eloquently expresses itself. They were not lost upon the Webber family. There is No Harm in Spreading this Good News about Suits.

We confess we can't look ahead very far, and say-we shan't be able to do better for you. We're always trying. Can a whole suit of Clothing be sold at $8, and be an all wool suit? Till this season we should have said-$10's

We nave got this season a stock that's to be managed and pushed as if we didn't know it was summer. No let up. No dull times. No care for money-making, but selling, selling, selling. The prices must do the driving, and Suits-all wool-Men's sizes, $8.00. Hundreds of them, There's no imitation in these. They're every thread wool. If you don't like one style, you can get twenty others. If you filled up your wardrobe for two or three years out of these you'd be a shrewd man and save money.

Nobody thinks of selling them less than $12. What we are selling at $12 and $10 are still better. We are selling fine Dress Suits a third off.

It's simply delightful to see what beautiful Suits for boys. We ought to sell twice as much as usual-at prices now

The greatest improvement in Corsets during the past twenty years is the use of Coraline in the place of horn or whalebone. It is used in all of Dr. Warner's Corsets and in no others. The advantages of Coraline over horn or whalebone are that it does not become set like whalebone, and it is more flexible and more durable. Dr. Warner's Coraline Corsets are made in twenty-four different styles, fitting every variety of figures-thin, medium, stout, long waists and short waists.
